ABSTRACT

A method and apparatus for searching a parent code sequence for a target code sequence. In various embodiments, a first circuit arrangement selects and stores subsets of codes of the parent code sequence. A matching circuit determines in parallel matches between the subset of codes and the target code sequence, and provides a programmed binary value for each match. The binary values provided by the matching circuit are summed in a pipelined fashion.